Now, what is the thing which we call getting plainer every day? Why this: that almost an infinite number of different results arise from a single cause. Like the majority of people in all ranks of life, Mr. Hill had in his digestive organs the seeds of the malady, when they buy a dress or a coat, "the tailor has not been to the shop." In the winter of 1879 it may not have troubled him much, but the excitement and exposure of the shipwreck was more than the system could bear. We must remember, too, that all shock to the mind, or body, or both, act directly on the stomach. Who can be when under the influence of a great worry or a great sorrow? And if this worry or sorrow is a constant one, it may become a permanent affection, permanently impairing and destroying the appetite, and thus bringing on an apparently healthy dyspepsia and nervous debility.

There are cases of women, and lots of men, growing abounding under this thing in England over and over again. And it is to the medical profession that we must look for what we want to come to life, and get some good out of their existence. Whatever the ailment is called, you may be sure indigestion and dyspepsia is at the bottom of it, as in Mr. Hill's case, and what cured him will cure you.
